

EPISODE 2: VISUAL ART OUTSIDE, ACROSS ART FORMS AND BEYOND

For the second episode of our podcast, we were joined by visual artist Pearl Kinnear, who spoke about creating transitory art outside, engaging "non-arty" kids, and exploring the expressive arts in a child-led way that often involves being ready to combine visual art with drama, movement and music.

The videos, Wee Inspiration idea cards and podcast episode mentioned in this sheet are all available here: www.starcatchers.org.uk/episode2

"Kids will find a way to be creative with just about anything."

CREATIVE WARM UP: THINKING SCHEMATICALLY

Using a torch, some clay/dough or some paint, have a play around and see how many schemas you can explore: <https://education.gov.scot/parentzone/Documents/nih058-schematic-play-sketch.pdf>

What other materials would be useful? E.g. adding a scarf to a torch helps you explore enveloping, a squirry ketchup bottle to put the paint in helps you explore trajectory.

Physically exploring schemas can help you identify other resources you can introduce to a creative experience to capitalise on children's interests and motivations.

POLICY INTO PRACTICE: REALISING THE AMBITION

'A balance of responsive planning and intentional planning is essential in providing suitable experiences that connect with and extend children's interests and motivations.'
(page 63)

Watch the videos that accompany this podcast: Action Painting, Light Painting and Papier-Mâché Pods (www.starcatchers.org.uk/episode2)

Are the ideas in the videos more about:

- the learning environment
- intentional planning
- or responsive planning?

How could you share these ideas in ways that more closely extend the interests and motivations of children YOU know? E.g. superhero fans might enjoy Light Painting as "laser powers" (etc.)

In the podcast, Pearl talks about children shaping their own creative experiences. Children will always surprise us, but it can be easier to respond to the needs of the child in the moment if you've had time to think about possible outcomes and developments in advance.

Choose a visual arts idea from the podcast and create a mind-map exploring:

1. possible links to curriculum/wellbeing
2. how children's interests may develop the original idea
3. how you can support and extend learning

"Quality settings [...] understand the learning possibilities afforded by the interactions, experiences and spaces we facilitate for the children so that their learning can be both responsively and intentionally planned for, supported and extended." (page 83)
